U.S., Vatican Establish Full Diplomatic Ties

By David Hoffman Washington Post Service

WASHINGTON - President Ronald Reagan announced Tuesday that he will nominate William A. Wilson to be U.S. ambassador to Vatican City, establishing full diplomatic relations with the Holy See for the first time in 117 years. Since February 1981, Mr. Wilson, 69, has been the president's personal representative to the Holy See. A close friend of Mr. Reagan's, he has been active in California real estate development.

There has been lingering Protes-tant opposition to the establishment of formal diplomatic ties with the papacy, but it is thought to have diminished in recent years.

Mr. Reagen's spokesman, Larry M. Speakes, said that the administration recognized the Holy See is an international entity that is "distinct" from the Roman Catholic Church, He goted that 106 other nations have formal diplomatic ties with the Vatican. The State Department puts the total at 107, including the Seychelles, which established relations three weeks ago. What we're doing now is establishing diplomatic relations," Mr. Speakes said. "The Holy See is an international focal point of diplo-matic cootact. We join these nations, including our major Western allies, in establishing relations with the Holy See,"

Mr. Speakes added: "The United States holds Pope John Paul II in high esteem. We respect the great moral and political influence which he and the Varican exercise throughout the world. We admire the courageous stands he takes in defense of Western values."

According to Mr. Speakes, Mr. Reagan's foreign policy advisers were "virtually unanimous" in their recommendation that the president take the action. Mr. Speakes said that Faith Ryan Whittlesey, the White House public liaison director, has been talking with groups that oppose the action.

John Hughes, the State Department spokesman, said that the administration's move, which he said was effective immediately, was made "to promote the existing mutual friendly relations" between the United States and the Holy See and should result in "obviously better

"We will have the same channel of communications as 107 other countries that recognize the Vatican," Mr. Hughes said.

He said he did not believe that public opinion opposed the action and argued that it would not violate the constitutional separation of church and state because "for a long time we recognized the Holy See as having an international per-sonality distinct from the Roman Catholic Church.

Pope John Paul II heads the Hoty See as well as the church. The first announcement came from the Vatican in a statement read by the Rev. Romeo Panciroli: "The Holy See and the United States, wishing to develop their already existing mutual, friendly re-lations, have decided in common accord to establish between them diplomatic relations."

Protestant objections forced President Harry S. Truman to drop his effort to establish formal relations with the Vatican in 1951.

■ Criticism by Protestants

The anoouocement brought wide criticism of Mr. Reagan oo Tuesday from various groups and vows to fight the move oo political and congressional fronts. United Press International reported.

"We are as opposed to it as we were in 1951 and for the same reasons," said the Rev. Dean Kelley of the National Council of Churches. "An ambassador to any church is inappropriate,"

There is no anti-Catholic animus in this," he said. "It would apply to any church or the World Council of Churches, Just because the church in the Middle Ages misconceived itself as a temporal pow-er in the game of diplomacy is no reason the United States should James Duno, head of the Baptist Joint Committee for Public Affairs, said the move was a "blatant violation of the principle of church-state separation.

Mr. Dunn said the Baptist committee, which includes the 14 million-member Southern Baptist Convention, the oation's largest Protestant denomination, will fight both the effort to fund the ambassadorship and the appointment of a specific envoy at Mr. Wilson's confirmation hearings in the Senate.

In a brief statement, Bishop James Malone of Youogstown, Ohio, president of the U.S. Catholic Conference, said that the group welcomed the move.

"This matter has been discussed at length for many years," he said. "It is not a religious issue but a public policy question which, hap-pily, has now been settled in this

According to a State Department estimate, the overall value of Private Citizens Are in Vanguard of Moves to Bring Former Military Rulers Before Judges By Jackson Diehl

Washington Post Service

BUENOS AIRES - When a judge prohibited 18 former army and police officials from leaving the country last week, Osvaldo Ce-sar Giorgi could take credit for another step in Argentina's judgment of its former military rulers. Mr. Giorgi is neither a prosecutor nor a lawyer. Five years ago, his son Adolfo was abducted by military security forces, and since then the frail retired schoolteacher, now 63, has pursued a solitary crusade in Argentina's legal system. His cause has been unchecked by military intimidation or the calculated moderation favored by Ar-

When his money ran short, Mr. Giorgi sold his apartment and personal valuables. When frightened lawyers refused to help him, he drew up his own legal briefs and tration by both governments on argued his own appeals up to the Supreme Court. When he was threatened, he sent his two other sons, his daughter-in-law and finally his wife abroad and lived for almost three years as a fugitive.

The result of that persistence has been a landmark action against leaders of Argentina's most repressive modern government. Among the officers subpoensed and restricted in Mr. Giorgi's case are former President Reynaldo Bigofficials in a secret concentration camp where political prisoners including Adolfo Giorgi --- are alleged to have been tortured and

Pragmatic Approach To Economy Led to Zhao's Rise in China

By Christopher S. Wren New York Times Service

BEIJING - With his smart business suits and scholarly hornrim glasses, Prime Minister Zhao Ziyang hardly looks like the tough administrator of the world's most populous nation. His talent, first in the provinces and now at the center of power, has been in daring to try something different.

Mr. Zhao, 64, is the role model of a younger generation of Chinese officials willing to bend the con-straints of traditional Marxist ideology to make things work. He has nomie policy envisioned by China's paramount leader, Deng Xiaoping. As bead of government, Mr. Zhao has been increasingly entrusted with diplomatic tasks, receiving official visitors at bome and representing China abroad. Although his current visit to the United States is his first, Mr. Zhao met President Ronald Reagan in late 1981 at the North-South economic conference in Cancin, Mexico, where he identified China with the interests of the developing world. He made a visit to Japan the next year and later made a swing through Africa, visiting 11 nations. Mr. Zhao ranks with Hu Yaobang, the party chief, as a likely ssor to Mr. Deng, who will be 80 this year and who has already retired from daily duties.

Like Mr. Deng, Mr. Zhao is re-garded as a political conservative, for all his economic liberalism. He once warned, "We should oever confuse socialist democracy with capitalist democracy."
He was boro in 1919 in central

China's Henan province, where his father was a landlord and grain merchant. He went to secondary school in Kaifeng and then in Wuhan. There he joined the ontlawed Communist Youth League in 1932. Six years later, be joined the party.

During the war against Japan, Mr. Zhao was a party official in the area bounded hy Henan, Hebei and Shandong provinces. He helped in-stitute land redistribution in Henan after the defeat of the Japanese in 1945.

With the Communist victory in 1949, Mr. Zhao was sent to Guangdong province, bordering Hong Kong, to continue work in rural development, and he eventually became second secretary of the south-judged to be too capitalist.

Mr. Zhao reappeared as a party official in the bleak northern region of Inner Mongolia in 1971. With the worst of the Cultural Revolution over, he returned to Guangdong and worked his way up to provincial party secretary in 1974. Because of his skills, Mr. Zhao was dispatched in late 1975 to Sichuan. China's most populous province. Radical Maoist policies had plunged Sichuan, once the nation's breadbasket, into such poverty that some peasants reportedly sold their daughters to buy rice.

Mr. Zhao reversed the decline in Sichuan with policy changes that seemed almost heretical. He allowed private farm plots to expand percent of arable land and created a system that paid farmers more for growing more. He let some factories retain part of their profits and experimented with a system of taxation that encouraged incentive.

The result was that industrial production jumped 81 percent and agriculture output rose 25 percent in three years. His innovations have been adopted throughout China.

Such a pragmatic approach brought him to Mr. Deng's attention. Mr. Zhao was made a nonvoting member of the Politburo in 1977 and a full member in 1979. In April 1980, Mr. Deng maneuvered him into the post of deputy prime minister that removed the daily operation of the government from Mao's handpicked successor. Hua Guoleng. In five months, Mr. Zhao replaced Mr. Hua as prime minis-

Since then, Mr. Zhao has been at the forefront of a campaign to make the government more responsive to contemporary needs. He has on Monday, called for the issuance slashed the "bloated, overlapping administrative structure" and pared back its bureaucracy.

He initiated a readjustment of the economy away from traditional heavy industry toward light industry and consumer products and set less grandiose goals that has en-abled China to meet the major growth targets of its current fiveyear plan in three years.

For all his efficiency, it is unclear whether Mr. Zhao has been able to build a power base sufficient to exert authority after Mr. Deng leaves the scene. He is short of clout with the powerful armed forces, and his tinkering with the

The officials declined to say whether the recommendation by the secretary, John F. Lehman Jr. covered both navy and Marine officers or how high in the chain of command the reprimands might reach. On Dec. 27, Mr. Reagan said: "I do not believe that the local commanders on the ground, men who have suffered quite enough, should be punished for not fully comprehending the nature of today's terrorist threat." "If there is to be hlame," he went "it properly rests here in this office and with this president." Senior White House officials said later that Mr. Reagan's remarks did not rule out administrative discipline such as the issuance of letters of reprimand.

Mr. Lehman submitted his recommendations as part of a Defense artment review of the bombins that killed 241 American service-

A special Pentagon commission that investigated the bombing con-cluded, in a report made public last month, that serious command failures by Marine officers in Beirut and military commanders above them in Europe had contributed to the inadequate security at the Ma-tine compound. NATO Agrees on Stance For Stockholm Meeting

By William Drozdiak Washington Past Service

BRUSSELS - The United States and its NATO allies agreed Tuesday on joint proposals for oext week's Conference on Disarmament in Europe, which the chief U.S. delegate, James E. Goodby, said could mark "a turning point in East-West relations."

Speaking after Tuesday's session with ambassadors of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, Mr. Goodby described the Stockholm conference's primary goal as "reducing the risks of war in Europe" and expressed hope that the Soviet Union will cooperate out of concern for its own interests. He said the 35-nation gathering "looms larger on the international scene" following Moscow's suspension of arms control talks in protest the deployment of new U.S. nucle-said that some tangible progress might be achieved by July.

He warned, however, that the Stockholm conference could be foiled if it evolved into a forum for what he termed "declaratory measures," such as the proclamation of nuclear-free zones or pacts re-nouncing the use of military force.

West German officials have voiced concern that the Soviet Union might seek to sow division within the NATO alliance by proposing concepts that bave elicited support in the West, such as the creation of unclear-free zones or declaration of a "no first use" doctrine regarding nuclear arms.

Mr. Goodby said that any mea sures under discussion "must be applicable throughout the 35 naions or else we would be retreating" from commitments made at meetings in Madrid and Helsinki on European security and coopera-

He said some countries, including Western allies, might seek to reach a quick agreement just to produce a cosmetic improvement n East-West relations.

"Our first priority should be to break new ground," Mr. Goodby said, adding that the United States would like to build on the Final Act of the 1975 Helsinki conference which called for East-West cooper-ation on security measures as well as for human-rights improvements.

He said NATO memb introduce proposals that would seek obligatory advance notification of troop movements and exer-cises, along with regular exchanges of information on armed forces and facilities for observers to moniand military activities. El Salvador Won't Exile Civilians on U.S. Demand

By Robert J. McCartney Washington Post Service

SAN SALVADOR - The Salvadoran government will fall short of meeting U.S. demands for exil-ing individuals linked to rightist death squads because it lacks the legal power to order civilians to leave, President Alvaro Magaña said Monday.
Three civilians whose exile was urged last month by Vice President George Bush have chosen to stay in El Salvador and face possible in-vestigations of their links to the assassination teams, government sources said.

The United States called for the exile of the civilians - at least one of whom is an associate of the farright political leader Roberto d'Aubuisson — as one of a series of demands for a crackdown on the death squads. Mr. Bush offered a substantial increase in U.S. military aid if the demands were met.

The U.S. government has to recognize that I am not in a position to put people in exile," Mr. Magaña said. "Exile is prohibited by the constitution."

Mr. Magaña's comments indi-cated that the United States would have to be satisfied with the steps taken so far to curb the death squads, which have been blamed for thousands of civilian deaths.

The steps include the planned transfer out of the country of three or four army officers whom Mr. Bush asked be exiled. The officers could be sent out because the army has the authority to reassign them.

Salvadoran political and military sources previously said that about 20 individuals were on the list of persons whom the United States wanted sent abroad, hot senior Salvadoran officials said Monday that the list had only seven names. The U.S. Embassy repeatedly has declined to comment on the oumber of names on the list.

The U.S. State Department and the ambassador to El Salvador, Thomas R. Pickering, have hailed Salvadoran progress in acting against the death squads, indicating that the Reagan administration improvement to ask Congress for additional military aid.

The administration contends that such aid is needed to help the Salvadorans battle leftist guerrillas, but Congress has cut previous aid requests because of El Salvador's poor record on human rights.

U.S. officials and human rights activists said last week that further steps would be necessary to weaken the death squads. Mr. Magaña made clear that resistance to additional measures would be strong, saying that "the reaction was terri-hle" to the original U.S. demands.

Mr. Magaña is in a delicate position, because loyalty among offi-cers runs strong in the army and far-right political factions view the death squads as legitimate "counterterrorists" against the leftist

The president said that three army officers whose transfers are planned were not being sent away because of U.S. pressure or because of suspected links to death squads. Instead, Mr. Magaña said, they are leaving because of concern for their safety since their names were linked to the death squads in U.S.

"It's too dangerous for them to remain in the country, where they are obvious targets for the left," he said. "If at the same time we are complying with something that the Americans want, then it's good for

Jane's Predicts New Soviet Navy Chief

LONDON (AP) - Admiral Vladimir N. Chernavin, chief of the Soviet Main Naval Staff, is set to succeed Admiral Sergei Gorshkov, founder of the modern Soviet Navy, as naval commander in chief, Jane's Defense Weekly reported Wednesday.

The first edition of the magazine published by Jane's Publishing Co. quoted authoritative sources as saying that there were no clear signs that Admiral Gorshkov's retirement was imminent. But there has been specilation since the rise of the Soviet leader, Yuri V. The decision to expel someone with diplomatic immunity involves a complex set of factors, and it may depend as much on the impact on foreign relations as on the merits of the criminal case, said Knute Malmborg, a State Department

In cases involving Soviet diplomats, for example, Mr. Malmborg said, the factors would include "the state of our bilateral relations at the moment, and given the Soviet propensities, we look at any Americans who may be in difficulty in the Soviet Union, because retaliation might

WASHINGTON - Senator John Gleon, declaring that the world faced the prospect of "being held hostage by state-supported intelear terrorism," has presented a nine-point program aimed at curbing the spread of nuclear weapons.

Speaking in Council Bluffs. Iowa, Senator Glenn said Monday that, in the long run, nuclear proliferation "may pose an even greater menace" than the arms race between the United States and the Soviet Union. His remarks were made public by his campaign office

His proposal included a pledge not to export sensitive nuclear components or fuels to foreign nations; sanctions against nations that help others obtain nuclear weapons and that seek to obtain the components to build them; and efforts to help other nations meet their energy and security needs without components or fuels useful in making nuclear weapons.

Senator Glenn, an Ohio Democrat, said proliferation threatened to unbalance the deterrence that has prevented nuclear war.

China's American Card

Who would have guessed that Ronald Reagan would open an election year by receiving the prime minister of China at the White House? The presence of Zhao Ziyang is an achievement for Mr. Reagan in setting aside some attitudes of his political past and accepting a larger view of the American interest. It could not have been easy for a president of Mr. Reagan's belief and constituency to do that.

Mr. Reagan has done his share to point Sino-American relations in the right direction. Richard Nixon, by accepting the idea of a single China, had made the breakthrough of removing Beijing from the official list of America's enemies list to a place somewhere on the side of its friends. Mr. Reagan had put at risk much of that immense strategie gain by his casual embrace of a two-Chinas policy. His midstream correction is what brings Mr. Zhao to Washingtoo now and allows Mr. Reagan to plan to visit Beijing in April.

In 1982 Mr. Reagan worked out with the People's Republic an equation on the sensitive issue of U.S. arms sales to Taiwan. Later, progress was made in the development area, which is crucial to the current Chinese leadership. Completion of an industrial and techno-logical cooperation pact is the leading practical business of the Zhao visit. A civil nuclear cooperation accord may also be reached if — an essential "if" — the Chinese can meet the requirements of American law for strict controls on ouclear exports to nonnuclear states. The United States seeks to bolster China's industrial progress and at least its defensive military capability without alarming China's noncommunist neighbors or unnecessarily provoking the Soviet Union. By and large, the Reagan administration has shown a good sense of where to draw this delicate line

Cries by the American right about "sellout" of Taiwan are relatively moted. The reason is that Mr. Reagan has accomplished his turn of policy without damage to the continuing American interest in Taiwan's safety and welfare. The Taiwanese themselves provide the best evidence. Overall, despite their jitters, they have reacted with maturity and aplomb to the turn of American policy that Richard Nixon began and Ronald Reagan is confirming. Although no one can say for sure just how the future relationship of China and Taiwan will evolve, all the leading signs indicate that it will evolve peacefully. That is what the United States owes Taiwan. Mr. Reagan is delivering. - THE WASHINGTON POST.

A Racist Death Penalty?

Unable to prevail with the view that execution is always unconstitutional, American opponents of capital punishment offer a lesser but still impressive argument. They ask the courts to recognize that death sentences are much more frequent in cases in which the murder victim is white rather than black. If true, that fact should weigh heavily against all capital punishment. The death penalty is barbaric and wrong state-sponsored killing that oeither atones for nor deters private murder. Life in prison without parole is humane punishment and adequate protection for the community.

Most likely, the death penalty will finally fall before the growing evidence that it cannot be administered fairly. One oew study of 17,000 homicide cases shows startling differences of punishment depending on the victim's race. In Georgia between 1976 and 1980 the death penalty was imposed on 67 of the 773 convicted murderers of whites hut on only 12 of the 1.345 murderers of blacks. The results in seven other states are nearly as striking.

A similar study is under review in the U.S.

Court of Appeals for the 11th Circuit, which covers Georgia, Florida and Alabama, ft purports to take account of numerous nonracial explanations for the discrepancy, eliminating them all until the ugly suggestion of racial discrimination stands alone. The court must decide initially not whether the study is accurate, only whether it is relevant. If admitted as evidence, it will presumably require a lot of explaining from states that want to maintain capital punishment. Previous debates of the race factor in capital cases focused on the death row population, fully half of which is hlack; but that argument bogs down in quarrels about relevant crime data. The new challenge is one the courts cannot safely ignore. Executing more blacks as well as whites would not make the death penalty less repugnant, but racial justice is a constitutional minimum. The advocates of repressive anti-crime measures, like preventive detention, are fond of saying that black Americans have the highest stake in tough measures because they suffer the most crime. Here is evidence that society takes murder more seriously when the victim is white. It demands an answer.

Other Opinion

A Taiwan Stick in Zhao's Closet

Off and on over the last 15 months China and the Soviet Union have held ministerial talks aimed at improving their strained relations. For a time the view from Moscow seemed to be that progress was being made. Last summer the Soviet media went so far as to. suspend virtually all attacks on China's foreign policy, and in August Yuri Andropov hailed recent positive trends" in Sino-Soviet relavmoon, if ever there was one, has been brief. Russian propaganda organs are again criticizing China, and it is surely no coincidence that the resumed attacks come as China's Prime Minister Zhao Ziyang begins an official visit to the United States.

That Mr. Zhao intends his meetings in Washington to be conciliatory was made clear by remarks that he made before leaving China. The major problems that have disturbed

U.S.-Chinese relations have for the time being at least been largely defused. The Reagan administration oow permits the sale of some high-grade technology that the Chinese have long sought. Last year's dispute over U.S. imports of Chinese textiles has been resolved. Considerable progress has been made in tough negotiations on a new treaty governing the rights of investors in both countries.

On the issue of chronie irritation - U.S. relations with Taiwan - Mr. Zhao has struck a relatively nonabrasive note. Without retreating an inch from China's traditional claims, he has conveyed an impression of reasonableness, patience and even understanding in regard to the American position. He recognizes, he said, that "the question of U.S. relations with Taiwan is a legacy from history." China, he repeated, "is not against the United States maintaining unofficial economic, trade and cultural relations with the people of Taiwan."

Arms sales, though, are another matter. While Prime Minister Zhao said that he would not press China's earlier demand for a complete and immediate halt in U.S. military transfers to Taiwan, he did repeat that China expects the United States to live up to its 1982 pledge to begin phasing ont such sales.

For China the arms sales question is the United States, Until such time as sales in fact end, which is something that Congress would have to decide, they will remain as a potential disruptive element in bilateral relations. It is not likely that China fears an attack from Taiwan, or even that Taiwan need fear military assault from a mainland deeply preoccupio with a host of other priorities, including the Soviet military threat to the north. For China the arms sales issue represents a fundamental challenge to its sovereignty.

Sooner or later that issue will be resolved quite possibly by the Chinese themselves, or Taiwan and on the mainland, reaching their own agreement. Until that time it can be expected to abide as an element in Sino-American relations. For now, China's intention seems to be to keep it in the background of those relations. The U.S. government, by sticking to the policy that it has pledged, can probably do a lot to see that it stays there. - The Los Angeles Times.

Palestinians and Realism

If King Hussein sees fit to "reactivate" Parliament after a 10-year suspension, it is with a view to strengthening his hand at a time when the division and weakness of the PLO give him an opening. The king has met PLO representatives several times in the last three months. Did they assure him that Mr. Arafat would not object to a reconvening of Parliament? Palestinian and Jordanian sources say so. In any case, the PLO leader has reiterated an intention to visit King Hussein quite soon.

Who is to represent the 800,000 Palestinians of Jordan in the very delicate phase that follows the PLO's recent setbacks? Thirty "deputies" will be sitting with that mandate in the Jordanian Parliamcot. By all accounts they are men without the slightest sympathy for the PLO dissidents' policies of all-out armed struggle. The mere existence of this moderate group will put pressure on Mr. Arafat.

The reaction of the people of the occupied territories to Mr. Arafat's visit to Cairo has already shown how immensely tired they are of occupation since 1967, and how ready they are for a realistic settlement.

Old Intelligence Skeletons That Rattle a Warning

PARIS — Some old American intelligence operations, oow only beginning to surface, offer a shocking tale of caution against new arguments that national security justifies any skulduggery. The stories are about Nazi and collaborationist war criminals, hired, protected and established in safety by America even as it prosecuted war crimes at Nuremberg. Decency and honor require setting the record straight, American interests, oow and in the future, require awareness of what really happens wheo secret agents are turned loose in the delusion of "fighting fire with fire."

The Justice Department is investigating the case of Robert Jan Verbelen, a Flemish collaborator convicted and sentenced to death in absentia to Belgium in 1947. For nine years after the war he worked for U.S. intelligence in Vienna, where he still lives. He says he organized a network of 100 Soviet-bloc agents.

Last summer an investigation of Klaus Barbie, whom the French call "the butcher of Lyons," confirmed toat he vas in the hire of America until, having become an embarrassment, he was given false papers sail sent secretly to the Southern Hemisphere on a well-established "rat line" that violated American law, Barbie is now awaiting trial in France. He had become a mastermind of the arms- and cocaine-smuggling regime in Bolivia, until a new government in La Paz delivered him to the French a year ago.

The General Accounting Office, at the request of Representative Peter Rodino of New Jersey, is looking into a number of alleged war criminals officially smuggled into America and sponsored to organize anti-Communist activities. A former Justice Department prosecutor, John By Flora Lewis

Loftus, has written about Byelorussians who worked for the Gestapo, then for the United States, and who now live comfortably as Americans with their files hidden.

The Canadian writer Sol Littman says that at least 1,000 Nazi criminals are living in Canada, sent years ago by British and U.S. secret services "to warehouse for future use." After World War II a secret group called the Office of Policy Coordination recruited Nazis supposedly able to provide intelligence from Eastern Europe and to organize underground guerrilla movements.

When their worthlessness became undeniable, they were sheltered and resettled to cover up the operation. Then it became necessary to cover up the cover-up. In the end, it was clear that moral betrayal of U.S. aims, law-breaking hy officials and many millions of dollars wasted had no intelligence use.

Michel Thomas, a French resistance fighter and now a U.S. citizen, who worked in the U.S. Army Counter-Intelligence Corps in those days, "I challenge any statement that employmoot of these people had any value." He can provide details as evidence that "nothing was produced except misinformation."

"Neither incompetence nor ignorance can be an excuse," said Mr. Thomas. "The actions were a shameful betrayal of everything we as a nation stand for and stood for."

And yet most of the Americans who took part were convinced they were selfless patriots serving the highest interests of the United States in ways ton sensitive to be legally accountable. It was the Cold War; the climate seemed to them reason enough to suspend law and judgment.

They were not doing anything that the Soviet Union did not or would not do. It did not occur to them that copying Soviet dirty tricks did not and could not serve America's purpose. Secrecy not only hid their tracks but kept them from understanding the futility of their activities.

Mr. Loftus concluded: "Official obsession with secrecy has a lot more to do with embarrassment lest American taxpayers find out about the hare-brained, dangerous and vastly wasteful schemes perpetrated in the name of national security than it does with national security."

These are old skeletons finally rattling in the closet. Allan Ryan Jr., who wrote the Justice Department report on Klaus Barbie, said that reforms of recent years should now lead intelligence officials to "realize that operational problems cannot be the exclusive concerns." He hailed "the end of the attitude that anything is permissible, including the obstruction of justice, it falls under the cloak of intelligence." Is he right that the lesson has been learned?

Will new skeletons have to be hidden after secret operations in Central America, to emerge in a generation or so? What is the mysterious Intelligence Support Activity up to? Is the congressional oversight committee watching now so that the United States will not have to regret later? Mr. Ryan attributed the past disaster to lack of "the democratic process of accountability."

The old records are an overwhelming argument against the pretense that more secrecy and less restraint on covert operations can serve the interest of the United States.

IFAD — Another Agency With Funding Problems

ROME - The recent heated dis-cussions in Paris over the seventh replenishment of the World Bank's International Development Association attracted considerable publicity. Less attention has been paid to the plight of the Rome-based International Fund for Agricultural Development in its own struggle for funds. In both cases, the attitude of the United States has drawn sharp criticism from other donors. And in both cases it is the poorest nations who will be the ultimate losers. For both organizations, the first few weeks of the year are crucial. On Jan. 12 the IDA will meet to finalize its replenishment. In February IFAD is to meet on its own replenishment. Meanwhile President Reagan will be completing work on his hudget.

IFAD grew out of the UN World

Food Conference in Rome nine years ago. Among its proponents were Henry Kissinger and the shah of Iran. They saw a need for a new agency to focus on the needs of the rural poor, so as to step up food production.

The UN agency brings together states of the OECD, OPEC and the non-OPEC developing world, designated as categories I, II, and III. All 139 member states are represented on the governing council, in which each category has equal voting power. IFAD was established in 1977 and began operations the next year with $1 billion in funds for the 1978-1980 period. Iran's commitment was re-category II total of $435.5 million. Saudi Arabia gave $105.5 million and Vcoczucla $66 million. The United States led category I, giving $200 million of the total $535 million. But the agency was soon hurt hy international developments. First came the revolution in Iran, whose new leaders have shown little interest in the shah's pet agency. Of the initial pledge of $125 million, Iran had paid only $41.6 million hy the cod of 1982. The advent of the Reagan adminis-tration meant a tough U.S. stand toward multilateral institutions. The decline in oil prices and production has thrown into question the funding ability of some category II states.

When it was time for the first replenishment, the United States cut its contribution from the $230 million offered by the Carter administration to $180 million. Iran slashed its pledge to $19 million. Of the total $1.1 hillion pledged in the first replenishment, category I pledged $620 million, category II $450 million and category III $30 million.

But by the cod of November 1983 only $748.6 million of the $1.1 billion pledged had been paid. The United States had paid only $40 million, less than a quarter of the sum pledged. Last month Congress approved the Reagan administration's request for an extra $50 million for fFAD, but

Some OPEC states have also fallen behind. fran has paid nothing toward Lihya had paid none of its $31-million pledge, but at the meeting said it would pay the full amount (Its representative said the delay in payment was "for certain reasons of our own relating to principles, not for economie reasons only," and pointed to the delays of some OECD countries.) Despite its economic straits and the Gulf war, Iraq has paid its full pledge of $31 million. Nigeria has only paid $13.5 million of the $40.5 million due.

The fund's president, Abdelmuhsin al-Sudeary of Saudi Arabia, has to cope not only with the shortfall in the first replenishment hut with the tortuous process of oegotiating the sec-ond, for 1984-1986. At issue are both the overall level of funds - which need to reach $1.3/1.4 billion to avoid a drop in real terms - and the question of whether the OECD-OPEC ratio should remain as before.

the governing council meeting.
Some OECD countries criticized the United States at the meeting.

Douglas Lindores, the leader of the Canadian delegation, expressed concern that the strong desire for a meaningful second replenishment was not shared by Washington. The Reagan administration's philosophy, he said, "scriously underestimates the negative impact on the development aspirations of the poorest members of the world community."

The U.S. assistant secretary of state for economic and business affairs, Riehard McCormack, reaffirmed the U.S. commitment to its pledge for the first replenishment. But he stressed that the level of OPEC participation would continue to influence other donors

The financial crisis comes just when the young institution is beginning to prove itself. At the governing council meeting there was widespread praise for its work. The fund has supported 138 projects in 77 countries; an estimated 40 million people have been affected.

IFAD officials are optimistic despite the funding problems. Sartaj Aziz, an official in the economic and planning department, said expericoce proves that "by the end of the century we could attack the bulk of the poverty problem. If the resources are allocated, the job is doable."

For the last three years, 24 hours a day, Ambassador Paganelli and his devoted helpers, American and Syrian, in the U.S. Embassy in Damascus bave sweated out keeping lines open to the Syrian government while Rick Atkinson and Jesse Jackson have been safe at home in their beds.

The major reason why Lieutenant Goodman was released was that the U.S. Foreign Service, through its staff in Damascus and with backing from the maligned State Department and White House in Washington, kept talking with the Syrians. This was done sometimes through smoke and shellfire. It was that work that made it possible for Mr. Jackson to stage his virtuoso performance. Mr. Jackson might at least have

But van Itallie's methods, which are shared by dozens of other U.S. adapters of foreign plays, divide the theater community. The dis-oute has both ethical and legal underrones, and its practical consequences include the payments of thousands of dollars in royalties.

On one side are some translators, generally scholars who speak the original languages of the plays. These translators contend that their English translations are often used by the adapters - who then keep the credit and the royalties for nselves. Such contentions, however, remain difficult to prove, and so, despite the pervasive grumbling, few cases have gone to court.

The situation is so terrible that no one thinks twice about claiming they translate from almost any language - Norwegian, Russian, Japanese. There isn't even a stigma attached to it."

Io opposition to the translators stand the adapters - the term generally applied to those who "translate" foreign plays without knowing the original language of the work - and their champions, such as Robert Brustein, the artistic director of the American Repertory Theater at Harvard and a theater critic for The New Republic. They say that an adapter with experience in the theater can produce a more effective version of a play than a lioguist without a stage back-

When a text becomes considcred a scripture that can't be changed, it creates a kind of deathly pall on the theater," Brustein said. "By observing the letter of the 'law' — that is, the play — you violate the spirit of it."

"It's a very muddled situation." said Richard Wilbur, the Pulitzer Prize-winning poet who has done acclaimed and widely performed translations of Moliere. "I don't think of the translators as a union being scubbed on, but f worry about the fidelity of adaptations to the originals."

The current theater season provides an idea of why the argument is so widespread. Besides van ftal-lie's version of "The Seagull," which closed in December, his 'translation" of Chekhov's "Uncle Vanya" was mounted by the director Andrei Serban at the La Mama Experimental Theater last summer.

The City Stage Company per-formed Botho Strauss' "Big and Little," in a translation credited to only partially fluent in German. Gene Feist, the producing director Builder," although he does not speak Norwegian. One reason van ftallie's adapta-

Although I sometimes long to see a Stade play that does not take place across two or three decades, I'm inclined to believe that behind the one-liners there's a level of truth about family life here that would be the envy of many more apparently serious dramatists.

N EW YORK — His army jacket flapping. Sergeant Robert Zink of the New York City Police charged past 15 startled men and women lined up in the candle-lit, garbage-strewn hallway. At the far end, footsteps could be beard behind a steel-plated door.

"Look at this," Sergeant Zink said, shining a flashlight at two jagged holes in the metal. "You put your money in here, they slide the dope out there. It's like a bank teller. It's steel plate. It's impregnable. That's how far it's come."

Sergeant Zink, head of the Ninth Precinct's undercover narcotics squad, walked back into the cold night. More than a dozen men -- called "steerers" in the trade — lagged down cars on the corner, shouting ".357," "E.T.," "Executive," "Mr. T," "Eagle," "Black Jack" and other brand names of heroin. Scores of men and women stood nervously in lines nearby.

"Look around," Sergeant Zink said." in the retail drug capital of the world."

In the past three years, the Lower East Side, once the famed "melting pot" that welcomed waves of immigrants seeking America's promise, has become the largest and most open beroin market in the nation. And, law enforcement officials say, the trade is increasing.

The sheer volume, which has turned some streets into 24-hour, open-air markets for illegal drugs, has overwhelmed city agencies, the police department, prosecutors, courts and federal drug enforcement agents, the officials admit.

'Out of Control'

"It's out of control on the Lower East Side, above and beyond anything I've ever seen or heard of," said Rudolph W. Giuliani, U.S. attorney for the Southern District of New York. There's a bazaarlike atmosphere. Not only can you go there at any time of the day and observe drug sales, but it's a continual flow and it's right out in the open."

City police say 31 operations are involved, selling beroin and cocaine from at least 34 locations; an increase of nearly 50 percent since last summer. They estimate the operations employ 600 to 700 lookouts, dealers and runners, chiding youths as young as 12. The total take: $180 million a year,

"We figure each location does an average of $15,000 a day," said Deputy Inspector Raymond J. Abruzzi, head of the Ninth Precinct. The drugs, each with its own name and logo, are openly hawked near schools, synagogues and churches. Buyers double-park cars from New Jersey, Connecticut and Pennsylvania. Plundered, burnt-out buildings have been converted to fortresses for dealing, with steel-plate doors, barricades, roof guards, attack dogs, trap doors and escape routes. They're very organized," Inspector Abruzzi said. "In Christmas 1982, we noticed two operations closed down. One went to Puerto Rico, one went to Hawaii [for vacation]. The whole staff, all expenses paid. Figure 30 people in all."

Most of the trade is in "Alphabet Town," about 50 square blocks of decaying tenements and rubble-strewn lots between Houston and 14th streets and A and D avenues. The area has 300 city-owned abandoned rates, gravest unemployment and lowest incomes in the city.

Repeated visits last month found drug trade so open, particularly on Second and Third streets, that a hot-dog vendor served seven addicts waiting to buy drugs one afternoon. When it rained, addicts stood in line under umbrellas. Brand Names

On Third Street, 21 men and women lined gainst a building to buy glassine envelopes of Magnum .44" heroin from a midget and three other men. On Fourth Street, two dozen lined up in a school courtyard to buy "The Wiz" and

"7-Up.' At 178 East Second Street, 32 iunkies stood on dark, garbage-covered stairs to buy "Executive" beroin that was being lowered in a pail from the top floor.

"It's like a street market, like an outdoor vegetable or fruit market," said the Rev. John Kennington, 50. an assistant pastor at Most Holy Redeemer Church. "Early in the morning, you see the people coming over from Wall Street in their Lincolns. People shoot up in cars, people shoot up on doorsteps. Baby carriages are employed to transport drugs."

In interviews, a 23-year-old dealer named Luis said that he sold $18,000 to $30,000 worth of "357" heroin a day. He said his weekly salary is $1,000, tax-free. His employers have offered him gold and diamond jewelry and expensepaid vacations to Hawaii or Puerto Rico as

A 16-year-old "runner," nicknamed "Be-Bop," arrested for the fourth time, carried a tattered notebook showing that he had delivered 2,450 packets of heroin in the previous three days. He was paid $100 a day.

Few Dealers Go to Jail

The heroin and cocaine traffic has flourished on the Lower East Side despite repeated city, state and federal crackdown attempts. City police alone have made more than 6,800 narcotics arrests in the area since July 1982, records show.

New York state has among the nation's strictest drug laws, requiring life sentences for repeated felony offenders. But courts and jails are overcrowded, so some cases are dropped or plea-bargained and judges are sometimes reluctant to impose long sentences. Many dealers carry only small amounts of drugs to avoid felooy charges. The result is that few dealers go

A 1982 study of 594 drug arrests found that of 452 completed cases, only 103 defendants were given jail terms. Only 27 were jailed for more than 90 days.

Using a $250,000 federal grant, the city has assigned four prosecutors to handle drug cases from the Lower East Side, But each prosecutor was responsible for more than 700 cases last year, said Sterling Johnson Jr., the city's chief narcotics prosecutor.

"If police made 10 times as many arrests and we had 10 times as many prosecutors, it would still be the same thing," Mr. Johnson said. "The more you arrest, the more they come back. It's like digging a hole in the ocean."

On the federal level, drug enforcement agents who targeted the Lower East Side three years buildings, and its 50,000 black, white and His- ago for special attention acknowledge making panic residents suffer among the highest crime little beadway in penetrating the organizations running the trade.

Hoping to scare dealers with stiffer sentences. the U.S. attorney began using federal drug laws in August to prosecute about 60 Lower East Side dealers. The first three were sentenced in December to four to six years in prison. Eight others received lesser sentences after pleading to educed charges.

A Dec. I sentencing memorandum for the first three dealers noted that, "as a result of continued law enforcement efforts by the police, Lower East Side dealers have in the past year switched to recruiting children, many of them young girls, to shuttle heroin, reasoning that they are much less likely to be punished if

Increased Purity

The trade also has grown, police said, because Lower East Side heroin is often 25 percent to 30 percent pure, compared with 3 percent to 5 percent pure elsewhere in the city.

The increased purity has led to overdoses. On Nov. 8, James Hayden, an acclaimed young actor who portrayed a drug addict in the Broad-way play "American Buffalo" died of an apparent drug overdose. At his side, police found several envelopes of "Trizone" heroin, a Lower East Side brand.

Police say the drug trade has caused more crime. Area homicides jumped 25 percent in 1983, and police estimate that half the larcenies and assaults and 70 percent of the robberies and burglaries are drug-related.

The drugs cause a lot of violence," said Lieutenant Steve Nasta, head of street enforcement for Manhattan South narcotics unit, which has assigned about 20 officers to the Lower East Side. "They've had 37 homicides this year. We estimate 90 percent are drug-related."
In one recent case, a dealer was killed for selling counterfeit drugs. "We had one guy pushing stuff on the street as 'Black Sunday' and it was quinine," Lieutenant Nasta said. "So they shot him. They call it infringement of trademark." Neighborhood residents are also victims. In July, 15-year-old Carmen Iris Rivera was shot to ernment allocated oo extra funds for the job, death on Sixth Street. Police said she was caught in a drug dealers' gun battle while walking with her mother. Two days later, a 13-year-old girl was shot in the hand. A mural painted in memory of Carmen Rivera now adorns 215 East Second Street, a sixstory, boarded-up, red-brick building. A red banner hanging from the third-story fire escape says. "Drugs are Suicide." Inside, police say, at least three brands of beroin are sold. The federal Drug Enforcement Administration estimates that 40 percent of the heroin imported into the United States is consumed in the New York metropolitan area. Heroin traffic also flourishes in parts of Harlem, the Bronx and Brooklyn. But experts say that the city's addict popula-tion, and the nation's, has doubled since the mid-1970s, when the federal government relaxed efforts to cut poppy production abroad. Experts oow estimate that there are 450,000 to 600,000 addicts nationally.

The Reagan adminstration has organized 12 interagency task forces to fight organized crime including Eddie Cantor, the Marx Brothers and drug trafficking. But critics note that the gov- Jimmy Cagney.

while delegating more responsibility to city and state police forces.

Profits Are Enormous

The drug profits are enormous. Mr. Johnson, the city's chief narcotics prosecutor, said a kilo (2.2 pounds) of 90-percent-pure heroin usually costs less than $50,000 to import. When the kilo is cut to 3-percent pure, it produces 30 kilos, each with a street value of $200,000 to $300,000. Other estimates range even higher.

The Lower East Side, which covers about two square miles including Alphabet Town, has been New York's best-known slum for more

Millions of Irish, Italian, German, East European, Jewish, Aslan and Hispanic immigrants have passed through its squalid tenements and sweatshops. The area spawned the Yiddish Theater, the American trade union movement, writers such as Jacob Riis, the musicians Ira and George Gershwin, and dozens of entertainers, Today, although the population is smaller, it remains poor and polyglot. A community news-letter, People's Press, is printed in English, Spanish, Chinese, Yiddish and Ukrainian.

But the old streets are changing. The Lower East Side has some of Manhattan's limited supply of inexpensive housing. Speculators and elopers are buying and renovating dilapidated buildings, hoping for a real estate bonanza.

Boutiques, art galleries and restaurants have opened, and gardens are springing up on empty lots. Punk rock and jazz clubs are busy. It has become, says the New York Daily News, "the hottest piece of real estate in town."

Neighborhood groups are resisting, however. They charge that the city is using the drug trade as an excuse to build luxury bousing and evict low-income residents. City officials deny the "Part of cleaning out the Lower East Side is bringing in the drug trade," said Valerio Orselli, director of a local nonprofit housing group. I believe it's part of city policy."

Community groups and some political leaders instead support the city's "urban homesteading" program, in which residents use their own labor and $10,000 city grants to rehabilitate or and $10,000 city grants to rehabilitate buildings that the city has taken over for nonpayment of taxes.

So far, only about a dozen buildings have been renovated in Alphabet Town, but the city has asked the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development for $3 million to rehabilitate 100 more apartments.

"It's a way of fighting the drugs," said Tom Cusick, deputy borough manager. "It's a way of moving housing forward. It's a way of putting people to work."

Chadors, Pistachios Mark Iran's Presence in Syria

By Judith Miller

D AMASCUS — On Thursday afternoons, the Iranian jetliners land at the international airport here. The passengers, most of them women shrouded in black chadors, de-

Another batch of Iranians wait at the airport to return home. Although they, too, carry big sacks, theirs are filled not with pistachios but with a dazzling array of products: plastic cooking utensils, leather sandals, butane water heaters, radios, irons, cloth and trinkets.

The scene has been repeated every week since last February, when Syria agreed to allow a thousand Iranian religious pilgrims to visit each week to help pay for the oil it imports from Iran. Although Syria exports oil, it needs light crude to mix with the heavier, sulfur-laden petroleum it produces. In the last two years, Iran has sold more than seven million tons of oil to Syria.

The tourism-for-oil barter arrangement is to increase to 2,000 visitors a week this month, officials say. The Iranian Shiite Moslems are Syria's only major source of tourism income. They are among the more visible manifestations of the close relationship that has blossomed between the two countries because of Syria's support for Iran in its war with Iraq, now in its Western diplomats here say they consider the alliance curious and potentially dangerous for Syria. They have warned Syrian officials that because Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeim's goverament is committed to exporting its Islamic revolution, the alliance could prove disruptive.

In the late 1970s, the Moslem Brotherhood -Sunni Moslem militants — killed bundreds of foreigners and Syrians in terrorist attacks, the diplomats said. Only after the government laid siege in 1982 to Hama, a Sunni orthodox stronghold in the north, killing thousands of fundamentalists and bystanders, was the religious rebellion brought under control. "Given this country's experience with religious zealots, they ought to be more sensitive to the dangers of letting Damascus become a play-ground for Iranian Shiite fundamentalists," a enior Western diplomat said. "They're playing with religious fire."

The relationship between Syria and Iran also provides some insights into the formulation of Syrian foreign policy—an often perplexing mix of pragmatism and ostensibly socialist, pan-Arab ideology. In interviews in December, Syrian of the selection with Iran an officials defended the relationship with Iran. Iran initially resisted the tourism agreement they said. Desperately short of foreign ex-change, it had virtually banned tourism and foreign travel by Iranians after the revolution toppled Shah Mohammed Reza Pahlavi in Feb-

In April 1982, Iran and Syria signed their first trade agreement after Damascus closed a pipe-line through which Iraq shipped oil to the Medi-terranean for export. Under the agreement signed last February, the Iranian minister of religion selects a thousand tourists a week from a flood of applicants. Because so many of Iran's men either have been killed or are lighting in the war, the bulk of the prospective tourists are women, officials said. Each pilgrim is given a cash advance of $200 to $250. Syria provides hotels, food and ground transportation during their stay.

The cost of the trip is often greater than the allotment, especially because the Iranians want to buy items that are either unavailable in Iran or that they are too poor to afford there. So most of the pilgrims bring merchandise to sell in Syria to help pay for their trips and shopping sprees in Damascus's well-stocked markets.

Initially, they brought carpets and other valubanned the export of these items, the tourists switched to pistachios. The trading takes place iust outside the Saiyida Zenab mosque, a giant, resplendent building in the southern suburbs of the city that houses the crypt of Zenab, the prophet Mohammed's daughter.

Inside the mosque recently, every inch of space was occupied during evening prayers by the Shiite faithful. The women's austere black chadors contrasted with the turquoise-blue Arabic tiles that line the mosque's dome, the dazzling painted glass lanterns and chandeliers, the gold and silver lattice design superimposed on walls of mirrors, the dozens of Iranian carpets that cover the floor tiles.

Men and women kissed the gilded frame of the crypt in the center of the mosque. Below the crypt an anxious mother kept watch over an obviously sick child, whom she had tied to the base of the crypt with a blue ribbon in hope of a miraculous cure.

The Iranians are taken to the mosque and other religious sites in tour buses decorated with posters of Ayatollah Khomeini and occasionally with photographs of President Hafez al-Assad of Syria. In the center of modern Damascus, the miramis Hotel and three other second-class or third-class hostelries are filled exclusively with the Iranian tourists.

.The manager of the Semiramis does not permit picture-taking in the hotel's musty, smoke-filled lobby, whose walls are covered with post-ers of Ayatollah Khomeini and revolutionary scenes from Iran. In addition to religious pil-grims, the hotel is said to house Iranian Revolutionary Guards, whom Syria permits to stay in Damascus while on their way to towns in Leba-non, where they work with the country's million

Mohammed Haider, head of the foreign affairs section of the ruling Ba'ath Arab Socialist Party's National Command, said the Iranians posed no threat to his country. "We befriend according to political stands, not because of religious ones," Mr. Haider said.

After its revolution, Mr. Haider said, Iran took many progressive positions. He said Iran severed ties with Israel, transformed Iran from an "imperialist" base for the United States into a nonaligned state and declared the Gulf neither Persian nor Arab but Islamic. Despite these positive political developments, he continued, iraq began the war against Iran without consuling Arab countries.

"We understood that the war would create great divisions in the Arab world, which harms our national cause," Mr. Haider said

Diplomats in Damascus say that Syria's support for Iran is also more readily explicable by the ideological rift between Raghdad and Damascus. Iraq is ruled by a rival wing of the Ba'ath party, and the presidents of the two countries are said to detest each other.

Mr. Haider asserted that efforts to heal the split in the parties had failed because President Saddam Hussein of Iraq "does not ruly seek Arab unity." The war between Iran and Iraq will end when Mr. Hussein is no longer in power.

Mr. Haider said. Mr. Haider said.

Mr. Haider said.

Western officials suggested that Syria was not displeased to see Iraq, its traditional nival-bogged down in a debilitating war with han the war has made easier Syria's efforts to expand its influence in the region and its begenteny over Lebanon, they said.

"This is a very shortsighted view," a Western diplomat said. "Eventually, Syria will restire that neither it nor Iraq, both secular states, his an interest in having an Islamic fundamentalist state on its borders."

Fluor Creates Post to Supervise Sales In Europe, Middle East and Africa

Fluor Corp., the U.S.-based provider of services to the energy and other natural resources industries, has appointed Al Ewert to the new position of senior vice president responsible for sales in Europe, the Middle East and Africa.

"Marketing in the Middle East, Europe and Africa, particularly offshort, will be crucial in the short-term to Finor," a company spokesman in London said of the newly created post. He said that in Europe, the company stands to gain most in the short-term from the oil industry in Britain and Norway, whose "marginal fields" in the North Sea are coming on stream. He added that the Middle East and Africa will continue to be important markets for Fluor.

Mr. Ewert, 55, moves to London from Fluor's Irvine, California, head

In addition, Phil Tevis has been appointed Fluor's vice president of sales for the Middle East and Africa, succeeding O.W. (Dub) Stanley, Mr. Stanley, who is retiring, will remain associated with Fluor as a consultant on the Middle East.

Pennzoil, Getty Oil File Suits

NEW YORK - Pennzoil Co., the rejected suitor in Texaco Inc.'s $9.9-billion planned takeover of Getty Oil Co., filed a lawsuit Tuesday to require Getty to honor its previous merger agreement with Socana

In a counter move, Getty went to court seeking to have the Pennzoil merger proposal declared invalid and charged that Pennzoil was trying "to interfere with, obstruct and delay the Texaco transaction."

Texaco, the third-largest U.S. oil company and based io White Plains, New York, signed a formal agreement Sunday to buy most of Getty's 79.1 million shares out-standing for $9.9 billion — the largest acquisition in U.S. history. Los Angeles-based Getty is ranked 16th in the U.S. oil indus

Texaco's bid at $125 a share preempted Pennzoil's earlier offer of 5.3 billion for a 43 percent stake in Getty at $112.50 a share.

The Pennzoil suit, which was filed in Delaware Chancery court, demanded that Getty grant Penn-zoil the option to 8 million Getty shares at $110 a share. The suit named Getty Oil, the Sarah C. Getty Trust headed by Gordon P. Getty, the J. Paul Getty Museum and

Gordon Getty, Getty Oil's largest shareholder, reportedly granted Pennzoil the option to buy the disputed Getty shares as part of the tentative merger pact with the Houston company that would have made Getty a private company. Analysts pointed out that if Pennzoil wins its suit against Gerty, it could turn around and sell the 8 million Getty shares to Texaco for a fast profit of $120 million. Pennzoil said its suit calls into question "the ability of Texaco to contract for the Getty shares now owned by the Getty trust and the

to contract for an option to 9 million shares from Getty Oil." Getty filed suit Monday in the Delaware Chancery Court against Pennzoil and Holdings Inc., a wholly owned subsidiary created by Pennzoil to acquire the Getty Hisashi Shinto, the president of NTT, is working out his company's evolution.

Japan's NTT Opting for a Breakup Similar to the One Forced on AT&T

New York Times Service
TOKYO — Hisashi Shinto, the president of Nippon Telegraph & Telephone Corp., probably ranks as the most interested foreign observer of this year's breakup of American Telephone & Telegraph Co.

His company, founded 32 years ago with AT&T as a model, is marked for a fate similar to that of the U.S. giant, NIT, which is government-owned, will be carved up, mostly by divesting local phone operations that are no longer very profitable. The new and smaller NTT would retain long-distance phone service and would go deeply into the new growth areas of telecommunications, as AT&T is

But while the U.S. company was essentially forced into divestiture by the government, its Japa-nese counterpart is voluntarily choosing a breakup to free itself for more rapid growth.

"Basically, the idea is the same on both sides of the Pacific," said Mr. Shinto, 73, "With all the new technology, the breakup of telecommunications monopolies is international common sense."

The traditional telephone business no longer offers NTT growth, oow that Japan is saturated with more than 61 million phones. NTT has already started to move into the fast-growing segments of the telecommunications business — facsimile, videotex, computer-to-computer data sions and the like.

For the future, Mr. Shinto has served notice that once he spins off local operations and reduces government regulation of NTT's operations, he will increase the company's stake in developing and distributing the new services, not just in transmitting them.

NTT, which is the world's largest phone compa oy outside the United States, has a grand design for putting Japan into what its officials call the "information age." This, as they describe it, is Japan's next stage of economic development. It calls for the widespread installation of compoters in homes, factories and offices, with all of them connected to a mpch-improved NTT network. Two years ago, NTT began laying the optical-fiber network that will be the "information high-

Ford Is to Build A $500-Million Plant in Mexico

MEXICO CITY - Ford Motor Co. announced Tuesday it will invest $500 million to build a new plant in Hermosillo, Mexico, to produce autos mainly for the Unit-ed States and Canada. Company and government officials said at a news conference here the plant would start operations at the end of 1986, with annual production of 130,000 units. The officials made no mention of reports that the vehicle assembly and stamping plant would handle a Japanese-designed car. Besides Ford, U.S. auto companies with operations in Mexico include GM and Chrysler Corp. Other foreign automakers in Mexico include Volkswagen AG, Nissan Motor Corp. and Reoault of France.

Ford said the plant would provide 3,000 jobs when operating at full capacity and generate 8,000 to 9,000 more jobs indirectly. It is expected to bring in $260 million in foreign exchange each year.

Job Losses Possible Eurlier, Donald Woutet of the Los Angeles Times reported from De-

Ford's decision to build an assembly plant in Mexico could elim-inate at least 10,000 jobs at U.S. auto plants and represents the latest move in the industry's search for cheaper production.

Company sources had earlier indicated that the plant would pro-duce Japanese-designed small cars for export. They said the car would be designed by Toyo Kogyo Co., which makes Mazda cars and is 25percent owned by Ford, Major parts would come from Japan, they

Ford, which has roundly criticized General Motors Corp. for its plan to begin importing large oumbers of small cars from Japan and supports limits on auto imports from Japan, insists that the project was forced on it by the Mexican government

The Mexican government last year announced more stringent export requirements for its anto industry, which has an auto trade deficit with the United States because it imports U.S. parts for use in locally sold cars and trucks.

But critics said Monday that those government restrictions provide Ford with a ready-made explanation for a move it would have made anyway. Normally, one trade expert said, such dictums from the Mexican government are winked at or diluted through negotiation.

The U.S. auto companies' search to cut ontput costs was given new impetus by GM's two-pronged small-car strategy of importing 300,000 autos a year from Japan and building 200,000 more in a joint venture with Toyota Motor Corp in Fremont, California.

U.S. auto executives say there are penalties for building cars in Mexico, including poor highways and railroads, shortages of skilled workers and an unsophisticated metals industry. That has resulted in major quality problems, and come of the U.S. auto companies has built cars in Mexico for the U.S. market.

But one economist allied with the U.S industry said Mexican industry had been opgraded, alleviating some of those problems.

He said he thought Ford was interested in "testing" Mexico as part of a possible long-term Latin American strategy for supplying autos and parts for export.

WASHINGTON - The U.S. deputy trade representative. Robert Lighthizer, said the farropean Community will decide by Saurday whether to retaliate against the United State for U.S. restraints on specialty-steel imports. "I am not optimistic but I am hopeful" that an agreement to avert the retaliation can be reached before the deadline, Mr. Lighthizerskid at a news briefing.

He said the Europeans tentatively said they would retaliate by setting tariffs and quotas on about $160 million worth of U.S. exports to the EC, chiefly chemicals and sporting goods. 81. In Brussels, an EC official said a list of "compensatory" tariffs or quotas on imports from the United States would be sent to the Geneva-based General Agreement on Tariffs

U.S. to Press Chinese To Fulfill Conditions Of Grain Agreement

ORLANDO, Florida — The Reagan admin-istration will continue to press China to make up the 1983 shortfall in wheat purchases under the U.S. China grain agreement, Kenneth W. Dam, deputy secretary of state, said Tuesday.

"We are insisting that the Chinese make up, the shortfall and we will continue to work will. them to that end," Mr. Dam told 7,000 farmers hectic trading. Gold prices rose from 10-month lows.

Dollar Slips After 4 Days of Gains Against Top European Currencies

NEW YORK (AP) — The dollar ended Tuesday lower, snapping a four-day, record-breaking streak against leading European currencies in heetic trading. Gold prices rose from 16-month lows.

The dollar extended its gains as the trading day began, briefly reaching new heights against the currencies of Britain, France, Italy, Denmark, Norway and Finland, and climbing to 10-year highs against the West German Dentsche mark and Dutch guilder. But the dollar failed to stay in uncharted territory amid profit-taking by traders.

In Frankfurt, the dollar finished at 2.8125 DM, down from 2.8320 DM at the close Monday. In London, the pound rose to $1,4034 from the alltime low of $1.3997 Monday, the first time the pound had fallen below $1.40. In Paris, the frane improved to 8.5925 to the dollar, from a record 8.6500 Monday. In Tokyo, the dollar rose against the yen — the only currency to gain on the dollar Monday. The dollar climbed to 234.05 yen

In New York, the dollar fell to 2.825 DM from Monday's 2.844, declined to 1.399 to the pound from 1.393 on Monday and slipped to 8.625 French frames from 8.6775. The yen was unchanged at 233.7.

Hoare Govett Wins Government Job

LONDON (IHT) — The British government said Tuesday that Hoare Govett Ltd. had been chosen as the lead stockbrokerage adviser to the Department of Trade and Industry on its planned sale of British Telecom

The decision is a major coup for Hoare Govers, which is one of the biggest London brokers and is 29.9-percent-owned by Security Pacific Corp., the Los Angeles-based bank-holding company. The government also named the stockbrokerages of de Zoete & Bevan and Scrimgeour Kemp-Gée & Co. to provide additional advice.

The government plans to sell 51 percent of the public telephone monopoly to private investors next autumn and is exploring selling some of the shares in the United States. Analysts estimate that the sale would raise about £4 billion ($5.6 billion).

Suit Filed to Block Citicorp Purchase

CHICAGO (UPI) - The Illinois attorney general, Neil Hartigan, has filed suit to block final approval of Citicorp's acquisition of First Federal Savings & Loan Association, asserting that two federal agencies ignored consumers' interests in giving tentative approval.

Mr. Hartigan's suit, filed Monday, also charged Illinois authorities were not consulted when the Federal Home Loan Bank Board and the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corp. accepted the New York holding company's bid to acquire First Federal Dec. 15.

The soit, filed in the 7th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in Chicago, asks:

U.S. Home-Computer Industry Sighs BP Abandons With Relief, but Remains Cautious

By Aljean Harmetz New York Times Service

LAS VEGAS - The feeling this week at the Consumer Electronics Show here appears to be relief that the video-game and home-computer industry, in which some companies lost hundreds of millions of dollars during 1983, still exists. William Grubb, chairman of Imagic, said: "For this industry, 1983 was the year of humility." Roger Sharpe, the editor of Vid-so Games magazine, said: "The phenomenon is over. The industry dug its own grave by thinking that all you had to do was put some-thing in a box and the public would buy it. The question is where the industry will stabilize."

Many other experts said that most companies left in the industry would survive but would be taking a much more conservative ap-

According to Egil Juliussen of Future Computing, a company that does market analyses of the computer industry: "The video-games industry is now a replacement business like the automobile industry. The market won't die overnight just because everybody has one." industry experts said sales will be down moderately this year. There were 6.6 million game machines sold in 1983, down from eight million in 1982, according to the Electronic Industry Associa-tion, a trade association. Analysts and manufacturers put the 1983 figure closer to five million.

There were 75 million game cartridges bought from retailers last year, up 15 million from the previous year, according to both the association and analysts and manufacturers. But 40 percent of those as Atari's E.T., were sold as close- lysts' meeting Sunday, James Morouts ranging in price from $4 to $9.99. They originally sold for $25 to $35.

"In 1982, 60 million cartridges were sold, but 30 million cartridges were left on retailers' shelves," said Jerry Thompson, vice president for electronic sales at Parker Brothers. Thomas Lopez, vice president of editorial development at Activision, said the discounting would continue, but he noted that a few new cartridges did sell well. In Q-Bert, priced $30 to $35, Parker Brothers had a best seller. The game requires the player's e to hop on colored squares to change their colors while pursued by comical monsters. Parker Brothers' handling of Q-Bert reflects the industry's new caution.

planned games during the second half of the year from eight to three, concentrating on the three we thought could do best," Mr. Thompson said. "We had spent $5 million advertising Frogger a year other maker said privately that Inago to be played on Atari's VCS system. But we knew the VCS couldn't sustain a $5-million promotion in 1983. However, we

ms, and so we were able to spend the same amount of money,

$5 million." Mr. Juliussen said: "The video game is a special-purpose device, and that's the way to go early in an industry's growth. What we didn't anticipate was the bloodbath of Texas Instruments and Commodore slugging it out and bringing home-computer prices lower than prices of video-game hardware,"

The price of the Atari VCS was gan, Atari's new chairman, said that the average sales price of the VCS now was $61 and that Atari was "making money" at that price. What does 1984 have in store for video games? The entrance of such large retailers as Sears, J.C. Penney and K. mart has meant the death of many of the specialty stores that first fostered the industry. Chess and Games, a seven-store California chain, has filed for protection from its creditors under bankruptcy laws. A six-store chain, G.A.M.E.S., is down to one store.

Companies that make cartridges have shrunk from nearly two dozen to half a dozen. As for game hardware, many experts said that Atari's 2600 system would domi-"We bit the bullet and cut our nate the low end of the market, samed games during the second while its 5200 or Coleco's Colecovision would corner the high end.

Although Mattel Inc. insists that it will continue to make its Intellivision game module, almost every tellivision is no longer viable. "In-tellivision is dead," Mr. Sharpe said. Both Imagie and Parker Brothers have stopped making shipped Q-Bert for five different games for the machine.

On the other hand, many analysts and software makers spoke in surprisingly flattering terms about Adam, the new Coleco Industries computer that includes a word processor, a printer and a Colecovision video game.

At the show Monday, bowever, Coleco said that because of production problems with the Adam, the company would report a loss for the fourth quarter of 1983 hut would return to profitability in this marked down to as low as $49. Hopes were high for a buge oil discovery at Mukluk, but analysts now hold out little hope for a find meriting commercial production there.

The share market is paying un-usually close attention to BP's exploration off China and Alaska. The company, whose North Sea output is peaking, faces a sharp decline in its oil production late in the 1980s unless it makes a major discovery.

nal Herald Tribune LONDON --- British Petroleum Co. is abandoning its first explora-tion well in the South China Sea.

BP said Tuesday that the well in contract area 14/29 was drilled to a depth of 3,451 meters (11,322 feet) and yielded only "samples" of oil. The drilling rig will be moved to another test area as part of a threeyear exploration program by a BPled consortium, the company said.

But the Information Network System is merely the pipeline for the new services. The demand for equipment that essentially plugs into the system - including sophisticated exchanges and switches, local networks and terminals will total as much as $300 billion, according to the estimates of Nomura Securities.

NTT is not an equipment maker, as AT&T is, but it will buy and install the new equipment. Its current suppliers are a family of Japa-nese companies, led by NEC, Fujitsu, Hitachi and Oki Electric.

But as construction of the liberoptic network progresses, U.S. companies — AT&T, International Business Machines Corp., NCR Corp., Rolm Corp. and others are straining for a share of the or-ders for the billions in equipment that will be plugged into the new

The most likely method would be to have NTT retain trunk-line long-distance services, its four research laboratories and some advanced services, about as AT&T has done. Per-Capita Income Falls In Most Latin Countries

QUITO, Ecuador — Per-capita income last year fell in 17 of 19 Latin American nations, according to Enrique Iglesias, executive secre-tary of the Santiago-based Economic Commis-sion for Latin America.

He said Monday that only Argentina and the Dominican Republic did not suffer a fall.

Per-capita income for the region fell 5.6 per-cent last year to $911, he said. In 1977 the level

He attributed the drop in real income to a recession caused by the burden of a $310-billion combined foreign debt and a fall in the prices of the region's commodities exports.

KENSEL

By Steven Schlossstein. 320 pp. $14.95. Congdon & Weed, 298 Fifth Avenue, New York, N.Y. 10001.

Reviewed by Steve Lohr

K ENSEI" is a fast-paced tale of industri-al espionage that pits Silicon Valley against Japan Inc. in the high-stakes world of electronics competition. Woven into this trans-Pacific adventure story are the topical issues of economic rivalry between Japan and the Unit-ed States, and the rearmament of Japan.

The author, Steven Schlossstein, is a banker-turned-novelist who has lived in Japan and speaks its language; be knows the place and its culture. Schlossstein has all the particulars right — the names of Tokyo train stations, Japanese cigarette brands, the color of the bartenders' uniforms at the Hotel Okura, and

SO OIL. Throughout the text are a few dozen words and phrases of Japanese. Since Japanese is not French, Schlossstein provides a glossary at the end of the book. The reader learns, for example, that the little, steaming towels they give diners before the meal in Japanese restaurants are called oshibori. Included, too, are informative digressions on the tenets of samura life, Japanese industrial policy, and semiconductor technology, among other things. Schlossstein has his didactic side, but he keeps his educational forays brief and they do not detract from the narrative.

The book's protagonist is Art Garrett, the 43-year-old president of Micro Optix Inc., a small, entrepreneurial outfit that makes sophisticated electronic devices that the Pentagon cannot do without if the United States is to be adequately defended.

His adversary is Kenji Fukuda, an executive of a giant Japanese electronics company, who is determined to give Japan the crucial device so it can rearm and no longer rely on the United States for its defense.

Garrett is a latter-day Renaissance man. He has degrees in electrical engineering from Indiana University and the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, but the silver spoon never touched this man's mouth. Garrett is amply adorned with humanizing touches. His first wife died at a young age, a tragedy that threw him into his work single-mindedly. But before long, Sally Hendricks appears. She is divorced, attractive, and, in the current idiom, an "intellectual equal" for Garrett. Sally Hendricks is also an Asia scholar and the vehicle for the author's views on Japan.

Together, they foil the Japanese scheme for world dominion, but not until after the technological grail has been swiped from Garrett's northern California plant. Fukuda, Garrett's Japanese rival, receives less flattering treatment. In fact, the image of Japan presented in "Kensei" is not one that is likely to increase its many foreign admirers. To borrow the nomenclature of Ruth Benedict's analysis of Japanese society, "The Chrysanthemum and the Sword," Schlossstein's novel focuses on the latter rather than the former. There is much about this side of Japan that the author clearly admires. The Japanese proclivity for hard work, discipline, and the all rendered approvingly.

Yet Fukuda, as the main Japanese figure in the novel is overdrawn. He is brutal, cruei, and a criminal. Fukuda seems to represent the individual's commitment to the community are nightmare some Westerners have of the danger of pushing the Japanese too hard to make trade concessions and to spend more on defense. Push Japan too much, they warn, and the result may be a strident, nationalistic militarism reminiscent of Japan in World War II.

But Fukuda is too much a cardboard figure with none of the civilizing embellishments that would have made him a more believable character and "Kensei" a more convincing novel.

ON the diagramed deal West quite failed to realize that the entry for the suit he was trying to establish was in fact a liability. He was defending against three no-trump af-ter a competitive auction: The jump cue-bid of three dia-monds showed, by partnership agreement, length in both ma-jor suits, and it jockeyed his opponents into an unsound game. play by leading a club. West won with the jack and knocked out the heart acc, hoping to regain the lead with the club ace to score his remaining hearts. But when the declarer cashed his last diamond winner. West gave up a heart and was thrown in with the club ace. At the finish he had to lead from the spade queen and the game was made.

The key to the defense was for West to get rid of his club lead with it; he could have cashed it after taking the jack;

But talking to Noah leaves one last week's USFL draft.

with the impression that he is not willing to pursue a goal so consuming, and in a way so limiting, as the No. I ranking. Last summer, to the chagrin of French fans and the sporting press, he asked, "What kind of ambition is it to be a tennis player?" and concluded that it was

Last week be said: "Maybe I'd like to be No. 1 — I would like to be No. 1 — but I'm oot sure I'll make the decisions to do everything I have to to be No. I.

"I have changed a little bit my way of seeing my career. A few years ago, I just thought about win-ning. When I won, I was happy and when I lost I was unhappy, and that is not a good way to be. Now I am happy in my circumstances, even when I lose. That's my decision, not an excuse, because I like how I am and what I'm doing.

"There are so many things to see, to learn, and I just want to learn, I think when I'm finished, I will look back and say I tried everything to make something happen. I tried here and here and here - to make something happen, not just to

The likes of Maradona, Zico and Falcao, of course, were bound to fellow the proven Latin American star-trek route to European riches, a superpowers path spectacularly pioneered in the 1950s by Alfredo di Stefano.

But until recently, Europeans have largely been too lazy or too introverted to scour the vast tracts of Africa and Asia lor raw material. Sure, the French and Portugese occasionally dipped into their Afri-can colonies, but the example of Ensebio never became the catalyst that was expected. Both Portugal and Benfice rose to world prominence on Ensebio's

Can-Do Candidates

By Russell Baker

7 ASHINGTON — Jesse Jack-WASHINGTON — search into son's successful venture into Middle Eastern diplomacy had shaken the foundations of U.S. politics. Political analysts immediately realized that Jackson's competitors would also have to do something.

William Safire, an astute analyst, guessed that Senator John Glenn might parachute from the Good-year blimp into the Super Bowl and strike a blow for health by leading thousands of flabby spectators in mass calisthenics at halftime. Safire must have been as astounded as the rest of the nation when Glenn announced that he was flying to Tehran to urge the Ayatollah Khomeini to end Iran's war with

The White House complained that the senator's mission was a lot of damn nonsense. When Glenn succeeded, however, not only in ending the war, but also in converting the avatollah to Christianity. the president took it like a good sport and traveled to New York to be present when Mayor Koch presented the ayatollah the key to the Tve got to get out of these Holiday lnns and do something" Walter Mondale told his travel agent. The agent had heard rumors that Jesse Jackson was looking for hotel reservations in Havana, with an eye to persuading Fidel Castro to break with Moscow and join NATO. Thanks to some rapidly pulled strings, Mondale was in Havana before Jackson could get past the immigration desk at Miami. Fortyeight hours later, under Mondale's persuasive influence, Castro had burned his entire wardrobe of military fatigues, shaved his beard, put on a three-piece suit and made an impassioned 18-minute speech praising the CIA and warning against the spread of communism.

was overwhelmed by events in Moscow. There, Senator Gary Hart had not only persuaded Yuri Andropov to get out of bed and go to the office, but also to visit the United States with a new proposal for reducing the Soviet nuclear arsenal in exchange for granting the Central Committee free admission to Disney World and introductions to Robert Redford.

"You'd better find something to do" George McGovern's poll taker explained. McGovern flew to China. He arrived just in time to watch Senator Alan Cranston's historic news conference, the one in which Cranston announced that China was surrendering all claims to Taiwan, was adopting the two-party system and building 10,000 motels

Reubin Askew had also had to do something, so he had made peace between the Israelis and the Palestinians. It left McGovern little choice. He raced to Tokyo, arrived 20 minutes ahead of Glenn, and came away 30 minutes later with a Japanese agreement to import 2,000 American lawyers for every three cars it exported to the United

The Dragon Lady

Anne McCaffrey's Stories Seek to Redeem

Flame-Spitters' Sullied Image

By Sandy Rovner Washington Post Service

WASHINGTON — Anne McCaffrey is a voluble, ef-fusive Valkyrie of a woman who speaks dramatically - operatically, if you will - whether she is autographing copies of her newest, best-selling dragon book or discussing the travails of the lrish horse farm her dragons bought for her. Believe that Anne McCaffrey's dragons are a far cry from those she calls the "virgin-eaters." And she is emphatic in her denunciation of films like "Dragonslayer" which, she says with more or less mock indignation, subvert her efforts at cleaning up the sullied image of dragonkind.

Anne McCaffrey's dragons pop onto best-seller lists all over the world almost before the ink is dry. Neither pure fantasy nor pure science fiction, the so-called Pern books - including "The Dragonriders of Pern" trilogy:
"Dragonrilight," "Dragonquest" and "The White Dragon" — and an assortment of other Pern-related stories, have hit a happy formula that mainstreams both subspecies of imaginative fiction.

McCaffrey's latest, "Moreta: Dragonlady of Pern," is no exception in its popularity. Not yet No. 1, it is nevertheless perching as happily as a fire-lizard on maior best-seller lists. "Moreta" hasn't been sold abroad yet, but the other Peru books have been translated into French, Spanish, German, Italian, Dutch, Japanese and the Scandinavian lan-

Pern is an Earth-like planet settled by space travelers from Earth. Every 200 years or so a planet known as the Red Star passes close enough to Pern for certain life forms to make an attempt to seed the planet.

The spores that fall as silvery "threads" sear to the touch and eat everything except rock and metal. They are vulnerable to virtually nothing but fire and a par-ticular "slug." (Pern is richly abundant in life, but has only very limited rock and metal.) The original settlers from Earth genetically engineered certain Pernese life forms - including the kittenish fire-lizards - to fight the vicious "threads." The most dramatic success was the flying, flame-spitting dragon herce and courageous fighters against threads, but otherwise gentle telepaths who can also teleport - move instantaneously in space and time.

As they hatch, the dragons establish a permanent telepathic bond with their eventual riders probably their most enchanting and endearing characteristic and certainly a part of their attrac-

Her books, says McCaffrey,

"are about the fact that everybody has their own talent, their own speciality, something that is personal and unique to them, and by putting characters into situations where that talent can be fulfilled, you have characters with whom people can identify." Anne McCaffrey was born in Massachusetts in 1926 on April Fools' Day, a fact she considers quite in keeping with the destiny that left her beholden to a winged creature that seems to be part horse, part cat and part Labrador and inventive fancy. But biterary success came only after a failed marriage and a failed career -after nine years of study - as an opera singer.

In an early non-dragon success - "The Ship Who Sang," the disembodied "brain" of a spaceship taught herself to use her ship's equipment to produce top quality bass, baritone, tenor, mezzo, soprano and coloratura. McCaffrey's newest series -"Crystal Singer" - concerns another failed opera singer (in some other space and time) whose pure notes are just right for entting the crystal that provides the basis for that galaxy's technology.

A few months ago, McCaffrey says with some pride, she was on a book tour in Anstralia flying from Sydney to Melbourne, To her delight, the man in the next seat was reading "Moreta," "Is that a good book?" she found herself asking, rather more inno-cently than she ought. "Ob yes," her books. the man said, "haven't you ever read any of this author's books? You really should." McCaffrey introduced herself to, it turned out, David Ogilvie, director of the Sydney Opera Company. So much for Pern. "We talked about opera the rest of the trip."

Bot whatever else she writes, McCaffrey always returns to the dragons. She lives in Ireland on a small estate (one-third of an Irish acre, which is a bit larger than an American acre). Until recently her three children, now mostly grown and gone, lived with her, as did a favorite horse — Mr. Ed now also gone, to her palpable regret. But there is always an assortment of dogs, cats and other horses. The estate, in County Wicklow, is called Dragonhold. Several of her books have been optioned for movies. She sighs. There have always been a lot of queries and I just take the option money and run," but then the options expire.

Recently at a book-signing at Moonstone Bookcellars, Washington's science fiction and mystery specialty bookstore, McCaf-frey dealt with scores of fans, green eyes sparkling, she reigned in Weyrwomanly style over a stream of fans who quickly diminished a mountain of "Moretas," thrusting at her three or four books at a time for signing.

"I'm just a storyteller," says
McCaffrey. "I make no literary pretensions

But then she says, Kingsley Amis, the science fiction writer and critic, "once called me 'the Barbara Cartland of science fiction.' Well, really," and she huffs a little. "Well, in the first place," she says, still huffing, "I guess he's getting old and sour, but you'd never find any of my books at a secondhand dealer. "I was," she insists, "highly amused at the comment." She does not sound highly amused at all. In fact her eyes flash and just for a millisecond it looks like - yes, it certainly was - a lick of flame riding on a breath.

'Ironweed' Wins Award

The National Book Critics Circle has named William Ke "Ironweed" the best American work of fiction published in 1983. The selection of the novel, published by Viking-Penguin, was made by the member board of the circle, which is composed of about 300 books. reviewers and critics for U.S. newspapers and magazines. The general non-fiction award went to Seymour Hersh for "The Price of Power: Kissinger in the Nixon White House," published by Summit Books. Selected as the best work of criticism was John Updike's "Hug-ging the Shore: Essays and Criti-cism," published by Alfred A. Knopf. The awards will be presented Jan.26. . . Beverly Cleary's "Dear Mr. Henshaw," a story about a boy dealing with problems ranging from lunchbag thieves to his parents' divorce, has won the John Newberry Medal for children's book of the year from the Association for Library Service to Children.

Brian Wilson says he will continne writing and singing with the Beach Boys despite disagreements over the family's decision to bury his brother Dennis at sea, an honor arranged by President Ronald Reagan. "I disagree with the burial at sea," Brian Wilson said, with the surviving Beach Boys at his side during a news conference, the group's first public comment on Dennis's Dec. 28 drowning. "I thought that took on a very scary effect. Burying out at sea just didn't seem like the proper way to bury somebody. I went through a lot of changes there." Burial at sea is usually reserved for Navy and Coast Guard veterans. Brian, joined hy his brother Cart, cousin Mike Love and group members Al Jardine and Bruce Johnston, said the group would continue to record.

Peter Lawford has joined Elizabeth Taylor and Johnny Cash at a desert treatment center for alcohol and drug abuse. Daily Variety reported that Lawford was admitted o the Betty Ford Center at Rancho Mirage, California, a week after Taylor checked in Dec. 5. Lawford and Taylor appeared in several films together when they were under contract to MGM in the 1940s and '50s, including "White Cliffs of Dover," "Julia Misbehaves" and "Little Women." "Who would have thought it 40 years ago?" said Lawford, who told the trade paper that he had an alcohol problem. "We're both going to make it," he said. Lawford said he and Taylor both President Reagan's strategists came to Ed Meese. "At last the thing," they said.

"Doing things is not our style,"
Meese said. "I'll turn it over to the State Department."
